..LABOR-SAVING METHOD OF THINNING PEACHES USED BY GROWERS

Virginia growers are turning to a labor-saving method of thinning their peach trees.

F. R. Dreiling, VPI associate horticulturist, says thinning the peach trees partially with a rubber hose, and partially by hand, results in a 30 to 40% saving of man hours as compared to a complete hand job. Growers also are able more quickly to relieve the trees of part of their load.

Rubber - hose - thinning does not "break all doubles" or eliminate the small, ill-shaped fruits that should come off, but it can be later supplemented by hand-thinning.

To make the tool used in rubber-hose-thinning, cut a section from a bamboo fishing pole, discarded broom handle, or tree limb. Using a piece of 3/4 inch spray hose 12 to 15 inches long, force about five inches of it tightly on the end of the pole. The hose should fit snugly enough to stay in place while the tool is being used.

To thin the peaches, strike the branches about 15 inches from their tips. Then strike in the centers of all fruit cluster. Strike the limbs at right angles with the flexible part of the hose. Use a sharp firm blow. If all peaches that should come off do not fall at the first blow strike the branch again. Peaches should be thinned from 4 to 7 inches apart, depending on tree vigor and variety.

As soon as you have developed skill in thinning individual branches, work out a systematic method of doing the entire tree. Some thinners begin by going around the tree and knocking the excess fruit from all the overloaded branches that are seen and can be reached. Then they step into a natural opening and thin the inside and top. Then they step out and work around the tree in the opposite direction.
